In May 1969, seven young Latinos from the Mission district were charged with murdering a San Francisco police officer. They became known as Los Siete de la Raza by a broad-based community support group that worked with famed civil rights lawyer Charles Garry to win their acquittal.